FOUNDATION
OF SOUTH CAROLINA

FOUNDATION REPORT 2016

20 years ago, in response to God's call and in the spirit of the Sisters of Charity of St. Augustine, the Foundation began strategically using resources to reduce poverty through action, advocacy, and leadership; thus helping families in South Carolina to live out of poverty.

“Wherever someone is reaching out, asking for a helping hand in order to get up, this is where our presence must be.”

---Pope Francis

In the spirit of The Sisters of Charity of St. Augustine, the Sisters of Charity Foundation of South Carolina began its journey in philanthropy in May of 1996. For twenty years, the Foundation has been committed to providing resources so that individuals and families can “live out of poverty” and has invested over $62 million in the areas of education, health, and social services through more than 2,200 grants in all 46 counties of the state.

As we mark our 20th Anniversary, we reflect on the many lives that have been touched by the scope of our work. Through our grantmaking efforts, expanded advocacy and strategic initiatives, dedication to strengthening the leadership of nonprofits across the state, and support of the dedicated Women Religious serving in South Carolina, we have remained steadfast in our commitment to being not only a supportive presence but a force for change in addressing issues surrounding poverty in South Carolina.

In 2016, we awarded 167 grants totaling over $2 million. The Foundation partnered with a multitude of nonprofit organizations committed to serving those living in poverty as well as addressing systemic change, invested in initiatives committed to lifting up immigrant families and kinship care providers, collaborated to enhance statewide nonprofit leadership and educational programming, and supported emerging student leaders in the world of philanthropy at Benedict College and Columbia College.

Throughout the last 20 years, the Foundation has been driven by a spirit of service set forth by the Sisters of Charity of St. Augustine and we continue to be grateful for their guidance as we work towards addressing issues of injustice and ending the cycle of poverty in South Carolina. We are thankful for the direction and support of our Board of Trustees under the leadership of Gerald Smalls and look forward to continuing to be a strong presence to serve those most in need in South Carolina.

While we take this time to reflect on 2016 and the past 20 years of service it is important to also note that while the numbers of grants we’ve awarded, the dollar amounts given, the number of people served – all impressive and important, we also know that behind each number, there is a life, a story, a heart, and spirit loved by God and by us. Each life touched by our efforts has in turn been a blessing for us and for this we are truly and humbly grateful.

Vital Aging Faces Challenges with Heart

Nonprofits inevitably face challenges that are out of their hands. Whether it be an economic downturn or a lack of resources, at some point all nonprofits are forced to weather the storm and continue serving their community.

Vital Aging of Williamsburg County has done its fair share of weathering the storm—three, to be exact. Vital Aging was severely impacted by the ice storm of 2014, the historic flood in 2015, and the effects of Hurricane Matthew in 2016. Throughout all of this, Vital Aging was able to continue its reach to the elderly of Williamsburg County.

Vital Aging promotes the physical, mental, emotional and spiritual well-being of Williamsburg County's senior citizens. Services are provided with a framework of love, understanding, and respect to allow an opportunity for mature adults to continue their lives with meaning and purpose. The overall goal of the agency's services are to give low income seniors the tools that they need to remain healthy and happy in their homes, and reduce the cost/need of skilled or long-term care.

As a Caritas grantee, Vital Aging uses their Foundation funding to provide nutritional and balanced meals for the homebound residents over the age of 75 of Williamsburg County.

"Our participants are living on less than $800 a month, live alone with little to no familial contact in homes of fair to poor condition, often lack transportation and experience one or more chronic conditions," Robert Welch, Executive Director said.

The delivery of these meals proved to be a significant challenge during the recent natural disasters S.C. has witnessed. Currently, 250 homebound seniors receive five blast-frozen meals each week delivered by nine staff-assisted routes and one volunteer route. Not only were these routes made impossible by broken bridges, but many seniors were without power and unable to store their frozen meals for the week.

The demand for this program, especially in times of crisis, has grown in the last year with more seniors accessing the agency's services than ever. Census data from the S.C. Budget and Control Board Statistical Abstract shows that the Williamsburg County's overall population has decreased every year since 2010 to a 2016 estimate of 31,955. According to this same source, the county's 60 and older population was 22.6% of the county's population in 2012, but is now 27% of the county's population. With an ever increasing senior population, the demands for the agency's services continue to grow.

In addition to home delivered meals, Vital Aging offers homemaker services, which provides light housekeeping assistance such as errands and shopping, and three wellness centers for use, which provide lunch in a group setting and activities to stimulate the aging individual.

To learn more about the organization and possible volunteer opportunities, visit their website at vitalaginginc.org, or follow the QR code provided.

"This population greatly depends on their home delivered meal as their primary source for balanced nutrition. Home delivered meals often help maintain a senior's independence and allow them to remain in their home longer." Robert Welch, Executive Director

PLACE Fellows

Teaching Philanthropy to the next Generation of Leaders

For 20 years the Sisters of Charity Foundation of South Carolina has been dedicated to not only helping families live out of poverty through philanthropy, but to creating awareness about the world of philanthropy to different populations. Four years ago, the Foundation, along with Columbia College, dedicated funding and time to the P.L.A.C.E. Fellows Program, a program designed to increase students' awareness of philanthropy, leadership, and community engagement.

From conversations between Tom Keith, Foundation President, and Dr. Katrina Spigner, Sisters of Charity Foundation of South Carolina. Leadership Liaison, emerged the P.L.A.C.E. Fellows program in 2013. The success of this program would not have been possible without the guidance of Dr. Linda Salane and Columbia College Professor, Dr. Tamara Burk.

"We recognized that there were emerging, vibrant leaders coming on the horizon," Spigner said. "The Foundation wanted to use a portion of their resources to really hone in on that and collaborate with Columbia College to create an innovative program."

The program fosters a spirit of philanthropy both internally and externally. This program brings young women from all walks of life together and exposes them to the need for action and growth among the community, as well as neighborhood where they reside by tutoring, providing food and fun, and helping to build on the neighborhood's community assets.

The P.L.A.C.E. Fellows are focused on so much more than donating food or clothing. These young women are in the trenches using community service to enhance their understanding of philanthropy, their leadership skills, and their engagement with diverse populations.

This student group also allows for young women to explore the world of philanthropy while discovering their own passions. Not only are they enhancing their understanding of leadership and community engagement, but they bring their own lessons to their chosen internships.

"I have witnessed firsthand the extraordinary impact the PLACE Fellows program has on young women at Columbia College," Tom Keith, President, Sisters of Charity Foundation of South Carolina, said. "It has been remarkable for me to watch them grow as leaders in areas such as social justice, community change, diversity, equity, and inclusion. They have also developed a level of self-confidence that fuels their energy to do more good work to benefit others in the community. I look forward to seeing what these women accomplish in the future."

Collaboration for Ministry Initiative

Visionary, Intensive and Collaborative - Supporting Women Religious in S.C.

“From the outset, this work has been visionary, intensive and collaborative.” says Kathy Csank, primary researcher. The vision for the Collaboration for Ministry Initiative (CMI) came from the Sisters of Charity of St. Augustine (CSA), who had a long history of supporting the work of women religious, funding ministries in Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, and South Carolina, through their foundations.

The CSA leadership were well ahead of the curve in recognizing the impact that the aging and steady decline in numbers of women religious would have on the Sisters’ ministries in the future, and most importantly on the individuals, families and communities served by them, and they brought forward an idea for a new Foundation Initiative that would address this challenge, primarily through collaboration.

The Initiative began with an extensive research project across South Carolina, conducting site visits and interviews, meeting with Sisters individually and in groups, gathering first-hand information about ministry services, needs, and plans for sustainability; listening carefully to the stories, affirming the remarkable histories of service, and eliciting ideas about the value and potential of collaboration. Research findings indicated that in addition to the nationwide issues of ongoing decline in the number of women religious and in the resources available to meet ever-increasing needs, Sisters ministering in South Carolina at that time also faced challenges related to distances, isolation, and lack of infrastructure for communication and collaboration.

The research not only yielded valuable data for structuring a multi-faceted Initiative, but also raised awareness about the extraordinary scope and significance of the often hidden work and lives of women religious. The Sisters’ ministries and lives are inextricably inter-connected and the impact and influence of their presence in the communities in which they minister is profound.

“Predicated on the belief that, in these challenging times, sustainability of ministries could be enhanced through collaboration, CMI began with a major research project designed to gather first-hand information from women religious about ministry needs, plans for sustainability, and thoughts about the value of, and potential for, collaboration.”

The CMI was designed to be both sister-focused and ministry-supportive in endeavoring to assist the Sisters and to support, strengthen, and sustain their ministries throughout the state. Foundation support for women religious and their ministries has involved multiple strategies, including grant-funding, technical assistance, capacity building, educational workshops and resources, opportunities for convening, networking, renewal, enhanced communications, telling the stories, and raising awareness about ministries.

The Initiative also continues to be data-driven, gathering and processing information from many sources, including surveys of Sisters, interviews with Sisters, needs assessments, listening sessions, site visits, evaluations, and input from an Advisory Council of women religious. The Advisory Council, created in 2009, reflects the diversity of the Sisters’ religious orders, ministries, locations throughout the state, and provides leadership, expertise, and planning assistance to the Initiative. Over the years, twelve different Sisters from various orders have supported CMI in this capacity.

Since 2005, twelve annual Collaboration for Ministry Initiative Statewide Conferences for women religious and their congregational leaders have been held in Myrtle Beach, S.C. Co-sponsored by the Sisters of Charity Foundation of South Carolina and the Sisters of Charity Foundation of Cleveland, this annual 3-day event has become one of the hallmarks of the Initiative, providing a much-anticipated opportunity for women religious to gather for a week-end of refreshment and renewal, to learn and share and pray together, to enjoy educational and inspirational presentations, to network and connect with friends old and new. The Bishop of the Diocese of Charleston, Bishop Robert Guglielmone, has been present at most of the annual CMI conferences since coming to South Carolina in 2011.

In addition to the Annual Conference, CMI also offers other educational opportunities, including Regional Gatherings in different areas of the state, providing training in areas of current interest and benefit, such as this year's Technology 101 Training, requested by a number of Sisters. Past regional workshops have been held on a variety of capacity building topics such as marketing, grant-writing, fund-raising, board development.

To supplement web-site information and email communications, a CMI newsletter was initiated in 2005, creating another vehicle for connection among Sisters ministering in South Carolina. Published twice a year, it provides Initiative updates, event reports, and ministry highlights. The Initiative has also generated two books, published by the Foundation, and an award-winning video produced by Clemson University. "Eruptions of Amazement," published in 2009, is a book of reflections, stories, and prayers authored by the Sisters following the opportunity and encouragement to write received at a CMI Conference. "Stronger Together: Looking Back with Gratitude and Forward with Faith," 2013, celebrates the 10 year anniversary of the Collaboration for Ministry Initiative, and is a "woven history" of life and ministry stories shared by some, but representing all, of the remarkable Sisters ministering in South Carolina, who are the heart of the Initiative. In 2008, "Crossroads, a 24 minute video documentary highlighting the unique contributions of Sisters in three diverse ministries, and addressing the challenges to ministry sustainability, premiered on South Carolina Educational Television. This striking and thoughtful film earned a Southeastern Emmy Nomination and won a Silver Telly, a Bronze Telly, and a Videographer Award.

Among the many outcomes of CMI are the deepening of relationships, building of a support system, and development of a sense of collective identity among the Sisters ministering in South Carolina. The Initiative has addressed needs of the ministries, such as building capacity, enhancing sustainability, supporting changes and transitions, and has responded to the needs of those who minister as well. Essential to the integrity of the Collaboration for Ministry's culture and spirit is a deep respect and genuine appreciation for women religious and their remarkable works of ministry and an ongoing commitment to elicit their feedback in order to better understand emerging needs and provide appropriate responses.

The Collaboration for Ministry Initiative in South Carolina continues to be extremely valuable to the Sisters in the state. Looking to the future, the Foundation plans to continue its ongoing investment in the Initiative, including offering additional training and growth opportunities in the coming year which will help strengthen the capacity of all the ministries.

Advocacy

Engaging communities, strengthening families and laying the groundwork for social change.

Every person deserves equal opportunity and access to resources to care for themselves and their families regardless of where they are born, grow, play, work, or live. When individuals and families have adequate resources, everyone benefits and communities thrive. In South Carolina, far too many people live on the brink and struggle each day to get ahead. Many struggle to find adequate housing, access higher education or even after working multiple jobs still have to choose between groceries, medicine, or school supplies for their children. Growing inequality and low wages are just two obstacles that people experiencing poverty face. This leads to unequal disparities and outcomes.

At the Sisters of Charity Foundation of South Carolina advocacy is who we are. It's central to our mission. We leverage our influence and twenty years of expertise to advocate alongside and on behalf of those we serve. As we move people out of poverty through strategic action, advocacy, and leadership, we intentionally engage a range of community stakeholders, building strong alliances with government agencies, legislators, funding partners, nonprofit leaders, institutions of higher education, and other important constituents to address needed social change. Our public policy agenda specifically focuses on lifting individuals and families out of poverty by examining two-generation strategies to support low-wage parents and their children, the intersections of social determinants of health, building economic security for women, and investing in educational pathways for post-secondary success for low-income students.

Across South Carolina we also advocate each day promoting child well-being, belonging, and connections. Our child welfare advocacy efforts focus on strengthening supports for kinship families, examining child welfare data with a racial/equity/justice lens, educating with a racial/equity/justice lens, educating stakeholders on poverty-related intersections for young parent families, and bringing attention to the challenges facing youth living in or aging out of foster care who are at high risk of homelessness. In 2016, through our Kinship Care Initiative, with the support of our Statewide Kinship Care Advisory Council, in addition to testifying for legislators we partnered with the South Carolina Department of Social Services, the Palmetto Association for Children and Families, Helping and Lending Outreach Support (HALOS), and The Duke Endowment to educate more than 690 individuals across the state on the unique challenges facing kinship families.

“When all people have equal opportunity to grow, they can accomplish their dreams and advocate for others who follow in their footsteps. This is what advocacy is.”

We know firsthand systemic causes require systemic solutions within a diversity, equity, and inclusion framework. For example, Carolina High School has the highest poverty rates among high schools in Greenville County, with a population of 700+ students facing multiple systemic barriers to economic success. Through our Immigrant Families Initiative 2016 grantmaking, we championed and invested in the Student DREAMers Alliance, founded by the Hispanic Alliance – supporting it from when it was just an idea to its successful programmatic launch – who partnered with Carolina High School to serve its immigrant students.

Inspired by the Aspen Institute's and Liberty Fellowship's approach to fostering enlightened leadership, high achieving Hispanic youth from Carolina High School discover their potential and are equipped with knowledge, skills, and tools to position them for success and next generation leadership. Hispanic Alliance's Executive Director, Adela Mendoza, describes the creation of the Student DREAMers Alliance as “a bold and intentional step towards developing the next generation of diverse leaders that can take South Carolina into a more prosperous future. We have built a youth leadership accelerator model that can be replicated anywhere in South Carolina and across the United States.”

The Student DREAMers Alliance develops young leaders in Greenville while increasing awareness of education inequality and advocating for equal access to higher education for students. One of the participants in the first cohort was Abrahan, a hardworking teenager with a kind soul. Abrahan helped his family by working 40 hours or more a week while also attending high school full time. In order to continue helping his family financially he considered not applying to college.

Over the course of several months within the program Abrahan experienced a transformation. While using his voice to advocate for equal access to higher education for other family members and fellow students, he was encouraged to continue his own college application. He learned that with his high GPA he could attend college for free. One student, equipped with more knowledge, has changed the trajectory of his life, along with that of others.

We are a stronger state when we make sure everyone has a chance to meet their full human potential with access to resources to take care of themselves and their families. When all people have equal opportunity to grow, they can accomplish their dreams and advocate for others who follow in their footsteps. This is what advocacy is.

South Carolina ranks near the bottom nationally in quality public education, and many of the State's rural impoverished counties are also near the bottom. The Foundation's $12 million dollar investment in education has touched every county of South Carolina along with local and state departments of education.

From pre-school and school readiness programs to improved academic achievement and attendance through a national partnership, education continues to be a high priority for the Foundation as it looks for new and innovative ways to improve learning both inside and out of the classroom.

The Foundation views health in the broad sense and has invested significantly to improve the health of individuals, families, and communities throughout South Carolina. Whether it is supporting free medical clinics, Healthy Learners, USC School of Medicine Health Partnership in Marlboro County, or training school nurses on better ways to identify health issues among poor students, or supporting student action with farmworkers to insure that those working in the field receive adequate healthcare access, it all matters to us. Supporting TANF Reauthorization and seeking Medicaid expansion for low income families has been a priority for the Foundation.

To remain a steadfast voice and advocate for improved health and health access in the state continues to be a priority for the Foundation. Through new programs, partnerships and coalitions, the Sisters of Charity Foundation of South Carolina is poised to have a greater impact in the future because of these strong alliances.

The Sisters of Charity Foundation of South Carolina has invested more dollars in social services and outreach programs than any other category in it's 20 years. These programs exist in both urban and rural communities and provide a myriad of services to make life better for the poor and underserved of our state.

These programs might be job training and education for low income fathers so they can better provide for their children, programs supporting low income seniors so they are able to live their most healthy lives, working with women so they have the skills needed to get a job and to reach their vocational and financial potential, or women religious running an outreach center that provides food, clothing, and training along with other supports for a community in need.

Social services programs have been at the heart of the Foundation's work these past two decades and continues to be one of our highest priorities.
